Another 5 Star Amazon Review for Do It Again! / ¡Otra Vez!
Thank you Mrs. Shepherd!

Precious book role models healthy child-adult relationships!
By Mrs. Shepherd on September 19, 2018

I thoroughly enjoyed reading this delightful book about 3 year old Amy's fun weekend adventure of visiting her aunt and uncle with whom she enjoys a sweet, playful relationship. They clearly love her and enjoy her company. I love the presentation of such positive relationships between a child and adults. The fact that Amy has such good relationships with her aunt and uncle in addition to, though not instead of her parents, role models for a child the possibility of forming secure relationships with trustworthy adults in addition to his or her own parents. These relationships give strength and affirmation to a child's life in addition to the relationships she may already have with parents. The story communicates fun, security, and love with supportive, friendly adults. It will not only be enjoyed by children, but by the adults who read it to them, too!

Do it Again! is ideal as a bedtime story read aloud, and also appropriate for elementary age children to read to themselves. The writing is engaging and not over simplified. It would give a young reader something to sink her teeth into, without being too long or overwhelming.

There is enough repetition to give the story solid symmetry, but is never so repetitious as to become dull. There actually is real story here. It is not just a simple book that repeats a single sentence with little variation, as do so many books intended for young children. The repetition that is there is an asset, and makes it very cute!

What about Ghana?

What a wonderful experience! I have never felt so much genuine love and happiness from others in my life.

Three of us each carried three full suitcases full of bedsheets, fabric, books, baby onesies, prescription bottles, sewing miscellaneous, and cooking miscellaneous to share with Nyame Do teachers, administrators, and students.

I took copies of "G Is for Ghana" and presented them to the mission school's headmaster. And they need more! Fantastic!

We were fortunate to have some wonderful help with heavy lifting, guides, and interpreting, as Twi is the native language spoken largely in the area we visited. Two of our friends gave me two books, as they noticed I was making an effort to learn the basics of Twi. I thank them very much. Medase pa, my friends!

Our guides:

We visited the mission school more than once. The second time, I read to the students from my new book "Do It Again!"/¡Otra vez!

The temporary school vs the new school under construction:

A big highlight was attending the college graduation of Daniel Kwame Ametepey. Daniel grew up as many villagers, but kind hands were extended to empower him to learn and develop. Daniel now calls my sister Mom, and others have invested love and support to assist in the future of others who could not have achieved their goals without those gifts.
